1. A voice

St. Benedict's Prep has garnered a national reputation for its innovative approach to community building, student leadership development, and to combatting the emotional noise that far too many students face. Ninety-eight percent of St. Benedict's graduates attend college and 87% have either graduated or are on track to do so.

The Vox Institute was created in response to the expressed interest of schools, school leaders and education programs nationwide to understand the St. Benedict's model. This system has enabled SBP to help young men, often at-risk, to develop and magnify their voice, while also providing them with opportunities to grow into themselves and as leaders. St. Benedict's is committed to sharing our model with schools and education leaders who are committed to serving young people. The Vox Institute was established to fulfil that commitment.

Sharing Our Experience

Private schools, public schools, charter schools, churches, youth organizations, and other programs have expressed interest in the St. Benedict's Prep model.
